Church, State and Politics in Sixteenth and Seventeenth Century England

Thomas Tanner (1674–1735), author, churchman and indefatigable collector of manuscripts, was one of the key figures in the resurgence of historical and antiquarian research of the later 17th and early 18th centuries. As a Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford, chancellor of the diocese of Norwich and finally Bishop of St. Asaph, he was well placed in both academic and ecclesiastical worlds.

Ecclesiastical Authority in England: Church Court Records, c.1400–c.1660

Illuminating economic, legal and religious aspects of medieval society, this vital collection provides the working record of ecclesiastical jurisdiction. These important documents, spanning three centuries, touch on a wide range of key topics, including ritual and revenue; faith and practice; the morality of the laity and their religious behavior; marriage and illegitimacy; wills and administration of interstates; maintenance of the doctrines of the faith; the keeping of oaths; and the patronage and furnishings of the church.

Series 1: The Church Court Records of Ely

Some of the earliest records of church courts are held by the diocese of Ely, founded by King Henry I in 1109 at the site of the 7th-century Benedictine abbey of St. Etheldreda. These records provide valuable insight into the operation of church courts and their significant role within the diocese.

Series 3: The Shakespeare Library Collection, Birmingham Public Library

Covering a great range of productions in England between 1811 and 1929, Series 3 offers insights into both touring London plays and the Birmingham Theatre Royal's own productions. Included are the prompt books (1900-1926) of Frank Benson, the leading figure in the Stratford Shakespeare Festivals, and the Gordon Crosse Theatrical Diary, which offers a rare eyewitness account of Shakespeare productions

H-80.000. Series 3. 10 reels.

Series 4: The Shakespeare Centre Library Collection, Stratford-upon-Avon

The primary archive for all the records of the Stratford theatres is the Shakespeare Centre. It contains more than 500 prompt books, dating from the early 18th century to 1975. The collection's earliest prompt copies are from the days of the Theatres Royal, including the rare copy of Cymbeline used in David Garrick's version of the play at Drury Lane. The early years of the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre are also covered. The more recent prompt copies document the stage history of the theatres that have seen all the greatest Shakespearean actors, directors and designers of the 20th century.

King James I of England to King Christian IV of Denmark: Royal Correspondence, 1603–1625

From the outset of his reign, King James I (VI of Scotland) tried to ease the troubles between the English and the Danes. The subject matter of these letters to his brother-in-law King Christian IV of Denmark is wide-ranging. The principal concerns are English trading rights in the North Sea and the problems encountered by both mariners and merchants on the Continent. In general, the letters give new insight into the character and preoccupations of the King.

The 139 original Latin letters are reproduced from the collection housed in the Danish National Library in Copenhagen. They appear together with full English translations and have been edited and introduced by Professor Ronald M. Meldrum, Washington State University.

Politics and Administration of Tudor and Stuart England

The Lansdowne Collection contains more than 1,200 volumes of manuscripts covering a wide range of subjects. The most outstanding feature of the Lansdowne Collection is its range. In addition to matters of high politics, government, trade and religion, there are numerous documents of interest to historians of culture. There is material relating to Revels, Masques and players, disorderly inns and licensing laws, bear baiting, restriction of building in London, John Evelyn on old English popular customs, a manuscript copy of Middleton's "A Game of Chess" and John Daye's translation of "An Old Manuscript Containing the Parliament of Bees."

Property and Privilege in Medieval and Early Modern England and Wales Cartularies from the British Library, London

Cartularies are registers of muniments — the title deeds, charters of privilege and other documents kept by medieval landowners as evidence of their rights. The first cartularies date from the first half of the 11th century when religious houses compiled them, but by the 13th century, secular landowners had also started to produce them. Most of the cartularies were produced in the 14th century, although the practice continued well into the 16th century.

The Star Chamber and English Society in the Reign of James I: A Subject Selection from PRO Class STAC 8

The Jacobean Star Chamber Proceedings (STAC 8) have long been recognized as a key source for the history of the reign of James I. This selection of the most important documents in STAC 8 has been assembled under the guidance of the leading authority on the Star Chamber, Dr. J.A. Guy of the University of Bristol, and is designed to reflect all aspects of the Star Chamber's work under James I. A major feature of the project is that the documents selected have been filmed by subject, rather than class-code, making the material easily accessible in as coherent a form as possible. The subjects chosen are those defined in the Legal History Project of the American Bar Foundation, List and Index to the Proceedings in Star Chamber for the Reign of James I (Chicago, 1975). These important records of country and gentry politics form a valuable complement to those of court and Parliamentary politics, and are a valuable source for the 17th-century historian.

State Papers (Foreign) of Mary I, 1553–1558

The brief reign of "Bloody" Mary, half sister of Edward VI, was surprisingly eventful for British foreign affairs. Against the wishes of Parliament, Mary married her Roman Catholic cousin Philip II of Spain in 1554. This connection drew her country into a disastrous war against France that resulted in England's loss of Calais, its last possession on the Continent. These and other events make this collection particularly useful for students of British relations with Europe's major powers and of the conflict between Catholics and Protestants.

State Papers Medieval and Other Records PRO Class SC 1 (Ancient Correspondence, 1175–1538)

The Ancient Correspondence Class is reproduced in its entirety. Spanning the reigns of King John to King Henry VIII, this unique collection includes the correspondence of kings, bishops, popes, knights, noblemen, royal servants and lord's chancellor. Principally assembled from documents formerly held in the Tower of London, the Ancient Correspondence Class is comparable in breadth and detail to the later State Papers series. There are documents hand-written by Stephen Langton, John Gower, Pope Innocent III, most of the English kings and their chancellors, and a wide range of other medieval and early modern figures.

Affairs of state are the predominant theme, but also underscored are ecclesiastical elections, the besieging of castles, the wool trade, piracy on the high seas, the protection of lepers, enclosures, the keeping of servants and falcons, the presentation of jewels, taxes, safeguards against the invasion of England from France, border wars, royal buildings and local customs. More than 12,400 individual documents make up this substantial collection, which constitutes a major point of reference for all aspects of medieval studies.

Uncalendared State Papers (Foreign) of Elizabeth I, May 1592–March 1603

The State Papers Foreign for the period 1592 to 1603 -- a central source for English and European history -- are totally uncalendared and have until now only been available by personal visit to the Public Record Office. They are an essential complement to the magnificent State Papers Domestic already available. Denmark, Flanders, France, German Empire and Hungary, German States, Hamburg and Hanse Towns, Holland, Italian States, Rome and Venice (from PRO Classes SP 75, 77–78, 80–82, 84–85, 94, 99).

Unpublished State Papers of the English Civil War and Interregnum

This collection is divided into five parts, each illuminating different dimensions of the period and reproducing substantial series of key classes from the public records.

Part 1, taken from PRO classes SP 20, 22, 24 and 28, illustrates the work of parliamentary committees, the most striking innovation in the structure of government introduced by the Long Parliament in the 1640s. The vast bulk of Exchequer papers at the Public Records Office have often deterred scholars from pursuing an in-depth study of finance during the Civil War. Parts Two to Five offer material that makes this important study feasible. How was the Civil War financed? How effective was the Parliamentary regime? What were the implications for the Royalists? How was royal property assessed and disposed? What was done to deal with general social, political and economic dislocations? This collection offers a mass of material with which to answer such questions.

18TH CENTURY

Aristocracy, the State and the Local Community

The correspondence consists of thousands of letters dated from 1477 to 1828. Every conceivable aspect of the aristocratic family's affairs and its involvement in significant national and local issues is illuminated here. There are letters about military affairs, taxation, elections, Jacobite politics, and plantations in America, the American Revolution, the Napoleonic Wars, marriages, estate matters, debts and education. The correspondents range from monarchs (for example, 17 letters from Elizabeth I and 34 from Charles I), politicians and public figures, churchmen, bankers and businessmen to tenants, estate agents and family friends. The collection also contains an equally valuable and numerous series of financial papers.

Complete Hanoverian State Papers (Domestic), 1714–1782

This edition will greatly enlarge scholarly access to a fundamentally important archive. Thanks to carefully prepared editions of centrally important document collections such as this one, most of the real scholarship can be done at home.

The complete surviving records of the great department of state -- never before calendared in print -- published in their entirety are contained in this collection. The papers on the politics and society of 18th-century England documents the administration of England; trade and shipping; naval and military affairs; social and religious life; crime, rebellion and discontent.

George I (1714-1727) covers the turbulent events of the early years of his reign -- from the Jacobite disturbances to Walpole's ascendancy. The papers for the latter five years, vital to the understanding of the political history of the 18th century, cover the foundation of the Hanoverian dynasty on a basis strong enough to withstand later crises.

Complete State Papers Regencies: SP 43, Volumes 1–27, Hanover, 1716–1740

The vital correspondence between the king and the regencies during the royal absences of both George I and George II forms an essential source of reference for scholars of the Hanoverian period. Preserved by the Public Records Office in London, these crucial documents highlight the extent and nature of decisions taken by government and, more importantly, who was making those decisions. The relative power of the king and ministers is clearly illustrated, enabling the scholar to pinpoint exactly where real authority lay.

These documents show the differing ways in which George I and George II conducted the business of the monarchy, and provide perspectives on the king's changing role in political and administrative history.

Early English Newspapers

This collection of 17th and 18th century English newspapers makes available scarce and deteriorating texts that provide researchers insight into events that might be glossed over in a history book. Early English Newspapers incorporates the collections of Dr. Charles Burney, who had more than 700 volumes dating back to 1603 and rival collector John Nichols. Many of Burney's and Nichols' holdings once were owned by Narcissus Luttrell and his notes can be found on many of the papers in the collection.

Eighteenth Century English Provincial Newspapers

This major collection brings together all known issues of newspapers for a broad range of towns throughout England and provides resources essential for scholars' understanding of the vitality and diversity of life in the 18th century.

Provincial newspapers are a key source of information on national as well as local affairs. Many were already firmly established by the first publication of The Times in January 1785. The identity and date of the first English provincial newspaper is uncertain, but by 1712, 15 had been established and by the end of the century there were more than 50. In the second half of the 18th century the provincial papers' earliest dependence on London publications lessened, with greater concentration on local news. Local essays, letters and numerous local advertisements were also featured.

Eighteenth Century English Provincial Newspapers offer a distinctive and unrivalled insight into all areas of life in the provinces, often playing a significant role in local political and economic debate. This is clearly illustrated in newspapers from towns such as Newcastle or Norwich, where each individual paper adopted a distinct political stance. Urban, economic, political and social historians will find these papers a valuable and stimulating research source.

Series One: Bath Newspapers

Bath was considered the foremost English spa of the 18th century and a focal point of cultural and social activity. For most of the second half of the century, the town supported two long-running newspapers, The Bath Journal and The Bath Chronicle, both of which are included in this collection. This edition is the largest in existence.

One of the leading business and market towns of East Anglia, Ipswich in the 18th century was a thriving port and the administrative and market center for Suffolk and Norfolk. Its prosperity was closely linked to that of the region as a whole, which moved towards a predominantly agricultural economy as its traditional textile industries declined. Almost every corner of East Anglian life is documented—from poor houses to politics, subscription concerts and farm sales.

Eighteenth Century Law

This collection includes titles representative of the development of law in the British Empire between 1701 and 1800 and is illustrated in more than 11,000 titles exemplifying the emerging philosophies of this dynamic period and the increasingly popular theory of natural law and a growing scientific and rational approach to all aspects of life. These beliefs, reflected in the arts and literature of the times, were also apparent in political, economic and social development. As such, Eighteenth Century Law presents written works on or about legal issues of the 18th century and emphasizes the transition of law based on religion to law incorporating one's natural rights.

Madden Ballads from Cambridge University Library

Before the creation of newspapers, broadside ballads — also known as slip songs — were the public's chief source of information about current events. Madden Ballads presents 18th- and 19th-century songs and ballads from the holdings of Cambridge University Library. The ballads were purchased by the common man from street singers, print shops and vendors throughout the country. Madden Ballads preserves this important primary source material. It traces the evolution of the broadside ballad from a simple printed sheet in the standard “old face” Caslon type to a large sheet containing several ballads in a decorative layout using fancy type, flowers and rules. Themes explored include romance, social satire, sporting events, crime, history and politics.

Unpublished Finding Aids for Genealogical Research: The Lambeth Palace Marriage Indexes

This highly important, previously unpublished tool for genealogical research helps users trace their ancestors as far back as the 16th century and point them toward a broader spectrum of career and other records concerning the life and activity of their ancestors. Before 1837, no central register of marriages existed, and the genealogist had to consult a number of widely dispersed registers and indexes. The marriage license records at Lambeth Palace Library document the location of 18th- and 19th-century marriages throughout England and Wales. The 34 volumes that calendar and index these records make them an important genealogical research source. These record the issue of marriage licenses by the Archbishop of

Actors and Managers of the English Stage

PREVIOUS TITLE: Actors and Managers of the English and American Stage

Series 1: The Papers of Henry Irving and Ellen Terry from the Bram Stoker Collection The Shakespeare Centre Library, Stratford-upon-Avon

The creative partnership of Henry Irving and Ellen Terry dominated the theater of late Victorian England. As Irving's secretary and tour manager for 27 years, Bram Stoker compiled a comprehensive collection of documents reflecting his detailed knowledge of the careers of Irving and Terry. Drawn from the wide range of records of both touring and Lyceum productions, this collection presents an unrivalled insight into the late 19th-century stage in England and America.

The material includes many playtexts in various stages of revision and alteration providing a valuable opportunity to study Irving's acting and production methods. Among the annotated versions of his most famous plays are his own corrected copies of "Cymbeline," "Coriolanus" and the prompt books for his acclaimed "Hamlet."

Part One covers the main sequence of playtexts and adaptations, magazine articles, playbills and programs, tour records, letters, pictures and reviews, filmed in chronological order by category.

David Garrick, the best-known actor of his day and a major celebrity of the time, corresponded with an extraordinary and diverse cross-section of 18th-century society. This series provides a fully-cataloged, complete edition of the Garrick correspondence from the John Forster Collection at the National Art Library. The correspondence illuminates Garrick's career as a dramatist, director and actor. Many of the 2,000 letters included here are to actors, writers or stage managers, and reveal Garrick's opinions on comedy, acting, playwriting and many other aspects of the theater.

The letters include not only those to the members of his own company, but also to such influential dramatists as George Colman, R.B. Sheridan and Charles Dibdin. Among his many non-theatrical correspondents were statesmen, writers, artists, military leaders and churchmen, with whom he discussed many important and controversial topics of the day.

Popular Stage: Drama in 19th Century England from the Frank Pettingell Collection of Plays in the Library of the University of Kent, Canterbury

This collection provides new insight into the nature of drama and the 19th-century popular theater in Britain.

Series 1: Manuscript and Typescript Plays

These plays provide new insight into the nature of drama as a whole and into the workings of British popular theater in the 19th century, both in London and in the provinces where the theater was very much alive.

Frank Pettingell, himself a working actor with a keen interest in the history of his profession, acquired the collection from Arthur Williams, an actor-dramatist of the 19th century. Williams hoarded working texts—in holograph, fair copies, typescript or paste-up--thus accumulating this splendid core of raw material. There are 180 plays, mostly in the author's manuscript, by Colin H. Hazelwood, 1823-75. These allow for examination of the priorities of a house dramatist, later than the almost equally prolific (and almost equally represented) George Dibdin Pitt. This material also offers a unique introduction to the plays of Samuel Atkins, Dion Boucicault (c. 1820-90)--author of the Colleen Bawn and an influence upon Sean O'Casey, C. H. Stephenson, Tom Taylor (1817-80)--some-time editor of Punch--and numerous others.

Altogether in this little-explored collection there are over 1,000 manuscripts and typescripts--many of them production copies bearing all the trademarks of the working theater. While the Pettingell collection contains volumes dating from the early 18th century and extends into the 20th century (to 1915), it is predominantly comprised of 19th-century material.

Series 2: Pantomimes

The second series of plays in the Pettingell Collection reproduces over 300 pantomime libretti, reflecting the tremendous popularity of this form of entertainment in the 19th century. It is a notable collection covering many theaters and writers: several pieces are extremely rare and are unlisted in Allardyce Nicoll's History of English Drama. One of the best-known and prolific authors of Victorian pantomime was E.L. Blanchard, and the collection contains many volumes of the pantomimes produced by him at Drury Lane in the 1870s and 1880s.

Series 3: Rare Printed Plays,

This series provides a unique look at the world of 19th-century Theater by making available a host of printed plays collected and annotated by some of Britain's finest working actors of the period, notably Arthur Williams and Frank Pettingell.

The more than 5,000 printed plays in this series fall into two distinct categories: single texts and those bound into composite volumes. The majority was printed in the 19th-century, but examples of 18th and early 20th-century works and previously unpublished plays are also present.

Public General Acts, 1801–1922

Prior to 1801 the publication of much of Britain's legislation was left to private enterprise. Thereafter, official sessional (later annual) volumes were issued and became known as the King's (Queen's) Printer's copies. Very few libraries have these official sessional volumes of Acts in their original form as issued by the King's or Queen's printer. They are a primary source of important information to historical and legal researchers studying the output of Parliament during this period, because they are untouched by the editing of later printers. These key documents allow researchers to trace the history of a piece of legislation, to examine repealed Acts as well as Acts in force and to see complete and authentic texts of the Public General Acts.

Public Order, Discontent, and Protest in Nineteenth Century England, 1820–1850 PRO Class HO 52

This collection contains not only letters from harassed magistrates, but a wealth of manuscript and printed sources arising out of local crises during these particularly difficult years. The papers give a vivid picture of conflict and struggle and provide first-hand accounts of working-class activities in these formative years of the world's first industrial revolution.

Complete Collection: 49 reels in 3 parts.

Radical Politics and the Working Man in England

Series 1: The Francis Place Papers in the British Library Department of Manuscripts

Francis Place (1771-1854) was England's most famous and effective extra-parliamentary radical. He played a central part in a series of radical organizations and campaigns from the 1790s to 1850s, including Joseph Hume's repeal of the Combination Laws and the drafting of the 1838 People's Charter. The Francis Place material constitutes an unrivalled and indispensable source for early 19th-century political and social history.

The Place manuscripts deal with all of these activities in detail. They plot the growth of working-men's societies and collective action and include invaluable material on the Great Reform Bill, the Bristol riots and the National Political Union.

Slave Trade Papers

Sir Thomas Fowell-Buxton was heir to William Wilberforce as leader of the anti-slavery movement in Great Britain. His papers provide a unique insight into the development of the Victorian social conscience and the worldwide significance of the great antislavery campaign. This source supplies fundamental material for any examination of the international phenomenon of slavery in the 18th and 19th centuries, the colonization and "Christianization" of Africa and the Empire, and the parliamentary and extra-parliamentary history of the abolitionist movement.

Allied Propaganda in World War II: The Complete Record of the Political Warfare Executive (FO 898) From the Public Record Office

This collection presents the complete files of the PWE kept at the Public Record Office in Kew as "FO 898" from its instigation to closure in 1946, along with the secret minutes of the special 1944 War Cabinet Committee "Breaking the German Will to Resist." Included here is all the correspondence, minutes and agents' mission files along with a complete collection of all the airborne propaganda leaflets dropped over mainland Europe during the war by the British and American air forces. These leaflets, single sheets and miniature books are often highly illustrated, sometimes satirical and sometimes intended to boost morale with speeches or addresses from exiled leaders. They were produced in all nine languages of the recipient countries.

Archives of the British Liberal Party

The political, social and intellectual contribution of the Liberal Party continues to attract wide study. This vital collection of Liberal publications documents the changing face of Liberalism from the inception of the Party, to the leadership of Lloyd George during the second half of the 20th century. It witnesses the dramatic decline of the Party in the early 1900s when, within a span of ten years (1915–1925), it was transformed from a party of government into the third party in the country. Previously unobtainable annual reports of the National Liberal Federation offer a look at a unique aspect of British political history between 1875 and the slump of the 1930s that was, for the most part, the history of the great Victorian Liberal Party. Also included is the complete run of Liberal Magazine.

Britain and Europe Since 1945

The strengthening of Britain's fiscal, social, monetary and political bonds with Europe had profound ramifications in world trade, defense and diplomatic arrangements. This unique collection of source material is produced by approximately 55 organizations involved in British–European relations since World War II. The organizations contributing include those who produce material relating to Britain's position within Europe; material from both single and multi–interest groups, both pro– and anti–Europe. Great efforts have been made to ensure that all opinions are fully represented.

British Treasury, Economic Depression, and International Finance, 1916–1943

This collection offers selected files from the private office of successive Chancellors of the Exchequer during a period of major turmoil in the national and international economy. They demonstrate the reaction of both government and the economic establishment in Britain to mass unemployment, the world slump and the Keynesian revolution in economics. The material includes: analyses of the international financial situation; the rise of the U.S. as a major financial power; the economic development of Nazi Germany; the international economic policy — especially the notorious return to the Gold Standard in 1925; the papers of several international economic conferences in the 1930s; files in which the British Treasury re-enacted the “new deals” proposed by Keynes and Lloyd George to “conquer” mass unemployment; and the actual records of deputations of the Chancellor from the most important industrial and political restraint within which the Treasury worked.

and feelings of the British people on the home front. The strength of these reports — a key primary source — lies in the fact that they were compiled from a great diversity of independent sources, notably the 13 different regional headquarters of the Ministry, as well as panels of civilians and officials. The subjects covered include reactions to the presentation of the war by politicians, the press and the British Broadcasting Corporation and opinions about evacuation, housing, rationing and strikes.

Sexual Politics in Britain

Women's liberation, gay rights and freedom have become major issues within today's society. The literature of these movements is important and reflects the deeper changes occurring within society, yet very few libraries collect such material for study and research. Includes publications central to these political movements, such as: Women's Voice; Women's Struggle; Women's Report; Union of Women for Liberation; Spare Rib; Sappho for Gay Women; Gay International News; Red Rag; Gay News; Socialist Woman; Big Flame Women's Group; and Banshees. The years covered are 1967–1974 with updates from 1975–1982.

Times Literary Supplement

This collection encompasses all published issues of the Times Literary Supplement (TLS), from its first issue in 1902. This collection also includes Literature, the predecessor of TLS, published from 1897–1902. Current year subscriptions are also available. Regular features of this world-renowned journal include extensive reviews of predominantly English works, comprehensive articles and the now-revered TLS Letters Page, an important forum for scholarly and critical debate. Among the list of TLS contributors are Virginia Woolf, T.S. Eliot, Sir James Frazer, G.M. Trevelyan, Herbert Read and many other notables of the literary world.

The Sir Winston Churchill Papers

The incomparable archive of Sir Winston Churchill is a richly detailed collection of more than one million original documents, most of which were carefully compiled and preserved by Churchill during his long and active life, and subsequently by his son, Randolph, for the purpose of writing Churchill's official biography and companion volumes. The Sir Winston Churchill Papers offer students and researchers of modern history unprecedented new opportunities in the study of international relations, the history of war, and the government and politics of Britain, her empire and the world.

Series 1: Speeches of Resonance and Power

This Class presents Churchill's speeches from 1897 to his final years. The papers are arranged in chronological order and are divided into House of Commons and non-House of Commons speeches. They chiefly consist of speaking notes, drafts, source material, press cuttings reporting the speeches, copies of Hansard (the printed Parliamentary record) and prints.

IRELAND

The British in Ireland: Dublin Castle Records

"The Dublin Castle Records provide a unique basis for understanding the administration of Ireland under the Union and the nature of the challenges posed to the government by the agrarian and national movements." -- Professor Charles Townsend, University of Keele

Series 1: Colonial Office Class CO904 (Dublin Castle Records)

The history of Anglo-Irish relations has long been characterized by violence and misunderstandings. This collection makes available original materials documenting the British presence and control in Ireland in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

British in Ireland chronicles an important period of the controversy, from the rise of Parnell and the "Land War" of the early 1880s to the climactic signing of the Government of Ireland Act and the establishment of the Irish Free State in 1921. The materials are drawn from surviving records of the British Administration in Dublin Castle.
