American Urban Life and Health, 1883–1914

Part 1: Reports of the Charity Organization Society of New York

This collection facilitates study of the crisis in urban development faced by the United States in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. The Charity Organization Society was at the center of reform work, and its reports provide a detailed account of living conditions and describe investigations of health, industry, delinquency, insanity and crime.

Asian Culture, 1845–1949

The Periodical Perspective

PREVIOUS TITLE: Asian Periodicals, 1845-1949

This collection covers events from the first colonization conflicts with the West to the 1949 fall of the National Government in China. The articles included in this collection offer both first-hand details of Asian culture and the reactions of Western observers and Asians to that society. British colonization was accompanied by an intense interest in Asian culture that resulted in many scholarly publications from learned societies. Nineteenth-century missionaries, determined to remold Asian culture to the Western norm, recorded their research on the culture they were otherwise determined to destroy. By the 20th century, Asians, aware of the advantages of appearing “Western,” published their own articles — very often simply propaganda aimed at attracting foreign investments.

Archives of the Federal Writers' Project

Printed and Mimeographed Publications in the Surviving Federal Writers' Project Files, 1933–1943 (excluding state guides)

This collection presents the Federal Writers' Project (FWP) publications of all 47 states involved in the project, which ran from 1933 to 1943. Forming the most complete collection of publications from all participating states, this archive contains more than 450 individual items, many of which are typed or mimeographed and received only limited circulation. The FWP was a part of “Federal One,” the arts project established by the Work Projects Administration (WPA) to cover music, theater, art and writers.

Committee of Fifteen Records, 1900–1901

The Committee of Fifteen, a New York City citizens' group that advocated the elimination of prostitution and gambling, was established in November 1900. The Committee hired investigators who visited city locations where "vice" crimes allegedly took place and filed reports on each site. The investigators scoured bars, pool halls, dance halls, "disorderly houses," and tenements during 1901, posing as clients to determine the locations where prostitution took place.

Denison House Records, 1891–1961

Founded in 1892 in Boston, Massachusetts, Denison House was created by affluent women who sought a "democracy" between the leisure class and the working class. To this end, the house served primarily as an outreach program center and worked to engage the neighborhood in many activities: classes in home nursing, English literature, and dancing; clubs and sports for boys and girls; and relief programs, such as a milk station and coal distribution.

History of Women Derivative -The Social and Cultural Construction of Girls

This collection examines the expectations for young women of different classes, ranging from the working girl to the college woman. It also provides valuable information concerning early social surveys on such matters as girl labor, and "unmarried girls with sex experience," along with a survey on the legal condition of girls and women in Michigan in 1894. In its focus and range, it opens an array of subjects that provide a wealth of compelling teaching and research possibilities.

Journal of Prison Discipline and Philanthropy, 1845-1920 and Prison Journal, 1921-1986

The Pennsylvania Prison Society, founded in Philadelphia in 1787, was the first private agency to concentrate specifically on correctional issues. The society's journal, first published as The Journal of Prison Discipline and Philanthropy in 1845 and renamed The Prison Journal in 1921, was one of the earliest periodicals devoted to studies of correction and crime. The articles run the gamut of subjects related to these fields, from discussions of penal philosophy to inmate interviews and analyses of prison costs. The journal not only provides information on prison conditions and the evolution of the American penal system, particularly in Pennsylvania, but also offers a detailed record of the penal reform movement in this country.

New Musical Express and Blues & Soul: The Journals of Popular Music

PREVIOUS TITLE: Jazz, Blues, Soul and Rock: The Journals of Popular Music

Part 1: New Musical Express and Predecessors, 1946-1971

The pre-eminence of New Musical Express among post-war popular music journals is proven by its longevity, its consistent ability to predict trends and by its enormous world-wide readership figures. The availability of 25 years of New Musical Express will open up fresh studies of the end of the swing era and the big band, of the influence of blues and folk on modern popular music, of the birth of rock-and-roll, the staying power of Motown and of the British invasion from 1963 onward, when the Beatles and the Rolling Stones conquered America.

Part 2: Blues and Soul, 1967-1987

Blues and Soul is boldly advertised as "The World's No. 1 Soul Music Magazine." It is the pre-eminent journal for information on the diverse worlds of soul, funk, disco, blues and rhythm and blues. To a lesser extent it covers jazz and reggae. In-depth interviews provide data unavailable elsewhere and crucial to any understanding of groups, individual artists, a wide range of musical genres and the music industry in general.

Witchcraft in Europe and America

The earliest texts in this comprehensive collection on witchcraft date from the 15th century and the latest are from the early 20th century. The majority of the material concerns the 16th to 18th centuries, the so-called "classic period." In addition to these classic texts, the collection includes anti-persecution writings, works by penologists (those who administered torture), legal and church documents, exposés of persecutions, philosophical writings and transcripts of trials and exorcisms.
