Boston Overseers of the Poor
Records, 1733–1925

This collection is an excellent resource for the study of 18th and 19th century charitable organizations. Established by a Colonial act in 1692, the Boston Overseers of the Poor provided relief in the form of food, fuel, medicines and sometimes money, to "deserving" persons, provided that they were "settled" in Boston. The Overseers also provided relief at the expense of towns where needy people resided until the town took charge of them and also provided relief to non-state residents for short periods until they were removed to State Almshouses.

The Cleveland Workhouse and House of Refuge and Correction Records, 1855–1950

The Cleveland Workhouse and House of Refuge and Correction Records, 1855–1950 is a valuable source for the study of penology and charity in a major city, particularly during the Progressive Era. Originally intended as a place where petty lawbreakers could work at productive occupations to help pay their fines and court costs, the Workhouse eventually grew to include The House of Refuge and Corrections, a juvenile facility; and Cooley Farms, a penal farm colony, that included a tuberculosis sanatorium. Though principally related to the administration and functions of the Workhouse, some of the material in this collection relates to allied organizations, including the City Infirmary and the Department of Outdoor Relief.

D3494. 24 reels.

Committee of Fifteen Records, 1900-1901

The Committee of Fifteen, a New York City citizens’ group that advocated the elimination of prostitution and gambling, was established in November 1900. The committee hired investigators who visited city locations where “vice” crimes allegedly took place and filed reports on each site. The investigators scoured bars, pool halls, dance halls, “disorderly houses,” and tenements during 1901, posing as clients to determine the locations where prostitution took place.

The strength of this collection lies in the affidavits or investigators’ reports, arranged by police precinct and street address. There are also 258 letters to the New York City Department of Health on the location of “disorderly houses,” and letters relating to police protection and corruption of city officials. The collection contains 26 scrapbooks of press clippings about New York City politics, police, and vice, typed abstracts of the events of the day, and a typescript of the defense testimony in the trial of police captain John D. Herlihy.

Denison House Records, 1891–1961

Founded in 1892 in Boston, Massachusetts, Denison House was created by affluent women who sought a “democracy” between the leisure class and the working class. To this end, the house served primarily as an outreach program center and worked to engage the neighborhood in many activities: classes in home nursing, English literature, and dancing; clubs and sports for boys and girls; and relief programs, such as a milk station and coal distribution.

The Records of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, United States Section, 1919- 1959

The Women's International League for Peace and Freedom (WILPF) was established in 1919 and replaced the Woman's Peace Party (WPP) as the official arm of the WILPF in the U.S. Following the aims set forth by the WPP, the group's main emphasis focused on promoting "methods for the attainment of that peace between nations which is based on justice and good will and to cooperate with women from other countries." This publication is arranged in three series: Historical Records, Correspondence, and Serial Publications. These three series—arranged in chronological order—document the WILPF's lobbying techniques, demonstrations, letter campaigns, speeches, and grass-roots organizing in their work for civil rights, disarmament, conscientious objectors, war refugees, and women's rights.
