Aristocracy, the State and the Local Community

The Hastings Collection of Manuscripts from the Huntington Library, San Marino, California

Accumulated from more than five centuries of activity in national and regional affairs, the Hastings family papers are a wealth of diverse material for research not only into English history, but also into Irish and Colonial American history. These manuscripts trace -- in remarkable detail -- one of England's longest surviving aristocratic families through the centuries. The correspondence consists of thousands of letters dated from 1477 to 1828. Letters about military affairs, taxation, elections, Jacobite politics, plantations in America, the American Revolution, the Napoleonic Wars, marriages, estate matters, debts and education are contained in this collection, as well as an equally valuable and numerous series of financial papers. These documents illuminate the running of the estate and household from the Middle Ages (the first document is dated 1281) to the 19th century, and include many personal accounts.

Britain and Europe Since 1945

The strengthening of Britain's fiscal, social, monetary and political bonds with Europe had profound ramifications in world trade, defense and diplomatic arrangements. This unique collection of source material is produced by approximately 55 organizations involved in British-European relations since World War II. The organizations contributing include those who produce material relating to Britain's position within Europe; material from both single and multi-interest groups, both pro- and anti-Europe. Great efforts have been made to ensure that all opinions are fully represented.

European Women's Periodicals

European Women's Periodicals brings together some of the most important political, professional and popular periodicals written by and for women across Europe during the critical period of the women's movement (1840–1940). Taken from the holdings of the International Archive of the Women's Movement (IIAV) — whose founders were active members of that movement — and the International Institute of Social History (IISG) in Amsterdam, these “vehicles for communication with the outside world” clearly illuminate the international struggle towards social and political equality for women in the late-19th and early-20th centuries.

Foundations of Modern Europe

The Archives of the European Movement: The Concept of European Unity

The European Movement focused attention on the idea of a united Europe on two levels. Firstly, a united Europe would serve as a call to all shattered communities to unite and rebuild during the post-war period. In addition, a strong and unified Europe would balance the emerging might of the U.S.S.R. The concept of European unity won huge support from the U.S. in both financial and emotional terms: both as a counterpoise to the U.S.S.R. and as a solution to the historic antagonism between France and Germany. The conversations, correspondence, papers and conferences of influential post-war politicians and diplomats involved with the Movement such as Jean Monnet, Robert Schumann and Paul Henri Spaak gave rise to the European Community in 1952 and laid down guidelines which would shape its consequent course. More importantly, the collection serves to illustrate the emergence of the concept of the European federal model, in contrast to American federalism.

Gerald R. Ford and Foreign Affairs

Part 1: National Security Adviser's Files

Section 2: Presidential Correspondence and Conversations with Foreign Leaders

This microfilm publication consists of two subseries of the National Security Advisers Files: Presidential Correspondence with Foreign Leaders, 1974-1977, and Memoranda of Conversations, 1973-1977.

The Presidential Correspondence with Foreign Leaders, 1974-1977 consists of a mix of routine and substantive letters and telegrams exchanged between President Ford and leaders of sixty-four countries. Substantive exchanges address such topics as Angola, the British financial crisis, economic summit meetings, Middle East peace process, OPEC, Cyprus, South Vietnam, NATO, and Soviet influence in Africa and Asia. Supporting materials, including memoranda, notes, and letter drafts, round out the collection. The collection consists primarily of letters, many of them originals, sent by foreign leaders to President Ford and copies of letters and messages sent by President Ford to foreign leaders. Many folders contain supporting materials used in drafting President Ford's letters and telegrams.

The Memoranda of Conversations, 1973-1977 consists of transcript-like records, and the notes from which they were prepared, of President Nixon's and President Ford's conversations with heads of state and foreign officials, senior intelligence and national security officials, American ambassadors, Cabinet members, members of Congress, and other distinguished foreign and American visitors. The memoranda of

Immigrant in America

Immigrant culture and experience in America have become objects of popular interest in recent years. While many ethnic groups are beginning to acknowledge their various native origins, Americans have developed activities and events honoring the achievements and contributions of their ancestors. However, the phenomenon of immigration has provided a difficult subject of study, owing in part to a serious lack of source material.

Spanning the years between 1789 and 1929, Immigrant in America covers two major waves of immigration. In 1820, 10 million people, more than 90% of them from western and northern Europe, entered the country. Among them were the Germans, English, Welsh, Scots, Scotch-Irish, British and Irish, as well as people from Norway, Sweden and France. The second wave, the peak of immigration, took place during the 1880s, ushering in arrivals from eastern and southern Europe: 27 million Poles, Greeks, Italians, Croatians, Ukrainians, Hungarians and Russian Jews. The implementation of the National Origins Act of 1924 effectively ended immigration by 1929.

Adjustment and adaptation were a constant problem for immigrants. Looked upon with suspicion and suffering from a good deal of anti-immigrant sentiment, they were continually subjected to efforts to Americanize them. Many found themselves scapegoats, blamed for social and economic difficulties. To prevent persecution and harassment, many families denied their origins. Only recently have descendants of immigrants elected to assert their backgrounds, calling attention to the contributions of their ancestors. Their struggle to assimilate, despite the threat of ostracism and bigotry, is reflected in this collection.

Not until the New York Public Library began to collect immigrant literature was any serious, systematic effort made to preserve the history of the immigrant. Immigrant colleges, agencies and historical societies gave information that helped piece together a fragmented and elusive history. Under the guidance of A. William Hoglund, Professor of History at the University of Connecticut and Trustee of the Balch Institute for Ethnic Studies, the Immigrant in America draws from several major archives, including the New York Public Library collection, to provide scholars with easy access to study sources.

International Population Census Publications

This valuable collection is based on The International Population Census Bibliography and The International Population Census Bibliography: Revision and Update, 1946-1977 as supplemented by new acquisitions updates and online catalogue postings. International Population Census Publications is a vital resource for the study of global census information from the 16th century to the 1980s. Using this easily accessible tool, researchers can conduct comparative studies on social classes, the rural exodus, urbanization and global diasporas, according to criteria such as gender and age. From this data, users can study the changes and developments within a nation's occupational, educational and socio-economic structure. Rare materials—taken from censuses as far back as the 1500s—are also included, and, in many cases, are reproduced from the only editions in existence.

Researchers in demographic and population studies will find this fully indexed resource invaluable. Those engaged in research in sociology, political science, history, geography and anthropology will be able to locate critical statistical information easily and efficiently. In addition, businesses, government and social agencies and town planning departments will find this collection useful for urban planning.

This microform collection is divided into three broad time periods: pre -1945, 1945-1967, and post-1967. The latter period includes information from the 1990s. This valuable resource allows researchers to: study industrialization and social change in the United Kingdom, Germany, France and other European countries; study urbanization and immigration; and study colonial societies and post-colonial nation-states.

Missionary Files: Methodist Episcopal Church Missionary Correspondence, 1846–1912

Organized by the Methodist Episcopal Church in New York in 1819, the Missionary Society aided the Annual Conferences in spreading the gospel and in performing charitable work in domestic and foreign missions. In 1907, the Board of Foreign Missions (BFM) was created to absorb the Missionary Society's duties in foreign work—promotion and support of Christian missions and educational institutions in foreign countries. These files are composed primarily of incoming correspondence from missionaries in the field. They are arranged geographically and then alphabetically by name within that area or conference.

Studies in Global Crises

The Global Financial and Economic Crisis

This new microfilm publication, The Global Financial and Economic Crisis, delivers the full story leading to the current global economic and financial crisis—highlighting corporate finance, joint ventures and M&A, country profiles, capital markets, investor relations, currencies, banking, risk management, direct investment, money management and all the rest—specifically tailored for faculty and students around the world.

This series provides students with a multi-disciplinary, policy-focused examination of the global economy with essential reports, analyses, and working papers focusing on the complex changes in the global economy, including the emerging patterns of financial, trade, and human capital flows and their effect on national economies; the effect of globalization on state capacity, policy autonomy, and national economic conditions; the relationship between economic, political, and social outcomes; corporate governance and competition; and the interaction of interest groups, states, and multilateral agreement and organizations.

Global Finance and Economics aims to deepen understanding of international economic and financial issues, to explore the international repercussions of decisions taken in the public and private sectors, and to examine the choices made by policymakers.

The Global War on Terrorism

When there can be little margin of error concerning the facts and recommendations on complex and volatile issues, key government officials and federal executive departments depend upon an elite group of private and governmental “think tanks,” military service schools, and private contractors to deliver the research studies and analyses that help mold U.S. policy.

The documents in this collection are diverse in scope and emphasis. They dissect specific global crises—explore the historic and contemporary causes, illuminate the psychology behind the crisis, trace its origins, and address the formidable problem of developing feasible policies to alleviate the crisis.

The value of these materials is both immediate and historical. They provide up-to-date information, while documenting the manner in which various crises have been perceived and addressed over the last decade. These seminal studies are important now and will remain of value in the future.

Primary Source Media’s new microfilm collection documents the U.S. response to the threat posed by international terrorism and the ongoing global conflict to eradicate terrorism. The research behind the studies, reports, and analyses represents an exhaustive review of the facts, causes, and political and military implications of a phenomenon that threatens every region of the world.

The Global War on Terrorism assembles research studies that analyze the goals and strategies of global terrorism. Theses studies, reports, and analyses were conducted by governmental agencies, and private organizations under contract with the Federal government. They represent the most rigorous and authoritative research on the global war on international and domestic terrorism.

The documents are diverse in scope and emphasis. They dissect specific terrorist events, explore the goals beyond the violence, illuminate the psychology of terrorism, trace the origins and development of terrorist movements, particularly al-Qaeda, compare state-sponsored and independent terrorist activities, and address the formidable problem of developing feasible counterterrorist measures and polices.

The value of these materials is both immediate and historical. They provide up-to-date information on the global war on terrorism, while documenting the manner in which terrorism has been perceived and addressed over more than three decades. These seminal studies are important now and will remain of value in the future.

Western Aid and the Global Economy Series 1: The Save the Children Fund Archive, London

The Fund began as a European aid agency setting up orphanages and refugee camps for displaced families in 1919, with a special emphasis on Austria and Greece, and significant overlaps with both early Peace and Women's movements. When the Fund turned in 1922 to the Russian Famine, saving an estimated one million children's lives, the organization took on a global role, witnessed especially by the huge political impact of the Declaration of the Rights of the Child arising from the Geneva Conference of 1923. From this date onwards, the archive consists more of what we would recognize today as "field reports" from the various projects -- vivid narrative accounts of the conditions and challenges in the field.

Dreyfus Affair in the Making of Modern France

The largest outside of France, the Houghton Library collection covers the controversy from Dreyfus' humiliating arrest in 1894 to 1908, the year Emile Zola's ashes were transferred to the Pantheon with ceremonial reverence. Reflecting continued interest in the Dreyfus Affair, it also includes publications through 1960. Comprising over 1,000 volumes, the collection contains all the well-known Dreyfus publications, such as Zola's 1898 newspaper article "J'accuse," as well as rarely seen archival materials. Documents from many different countries and all sides of the controversy reflect the depth and breadth of attention the Dreyfus Affair generated at the turn of the 19th century.

Based on the bibliography “French Political Pamphlets, 1547–1648: A Catalogue of Major Collections in American Libraries” compiled by Robert O. The Maclure Collection of French Revolutionary Materials

The 25,000 items included in this collection were amassed during and shortly after the French Revolution by William S. Maclure. Social reformer, Philadelphia merchant and the United States’ first scientific geologist. Probably the most interesting and useful feature of the collection is that nearly two-thirds of the volumes are bound by topic. Thus, scholars can easily find the information they seek on a particular subject rather than wading through the usual alphabetical listing of authors and titles.

The collection also encompasses the entire span of the French Revolutionary and Napoleonic eras and contains numerous volumes of items from the years before the outbreak of the Revolution. The rest of the collection, 677 volumes out of the total 1,436, is made up of 39 serials covering the years between 1768 and 1815. “The Maclure Collection of French Revolutionary Materials,” together with the published guide to the collection, is provided with each order.

George H.W. Bush and Foreign Affairs

It was in the area of foreign affairs that George Bush was most comfortable and most effective. His career up to the time of his election as president had allowed him to cultivate relationships with heads of state the world over. As commander-in-chief, Bush orchestrated military operations in Panama, Somalia, and most notably in the Persian Gulf. Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm found Bush successfully marshaling an international coalition against Iraq. Elsewhere, it was on Bush’s watch that the Soviet Union collapsed along with its satellite countries. In the aftermath, the Bush administration struggled to define what he had proclaimed to be a New World Order.

Part 2: Bosnia and the Situation in the Former Yugoslavia

This collection consists of materials related to the former Yugoslavia, particularly Bosnia, and presidential decision-making. This collection provides researchers with the opportunity to develop a comprehensive picture of the many issues and the impacts of U.S. policy on the newly-created republics. Issues addressed include diplomatic recognition, humanitarian relief, military intervention, and international negotiations. Documentation consists of cables, NSC materials, press releases, press summaries, news items, and letters from Congress. The press releases originated with such organizations as the White House Press Office, the UN, and AmeriCares (a charitable organization). Many of the press summaries were faxed to the White House by the Republic of Serbia’s Ministry of Information. Letters from members of Congress generally urge action of one kind or another in the Balkans and often include supporting material such as newspaper articles or reports. Most responses to Congress are form letters created by the Administration.

Eastern Europe. In the minds of many, the Cold War was over. Bush offered a muted response at a press conference on November 9. In retrospect, many people recognized that by refusing to gloat or declare victory over the Soviet Union, Bush probably helped avoid a backlash by hardliners in Eastern Europe. This collection provides an in-depth analysis of the events leading up to the fall of the Berlin Wall and its implications for U.S.-German relations.

This collection contains correspondence and telephone conversations between President Bush and German Chancellor Helmut Kohl concerning the fall of the Berlin wall and the reunification of Germany. Gerald R. Ford and Foreign Affairs

Section 2: Presidential Correspondence and Conversations with Foreign Leaders

This microfilm publication consists of two subseries of the National Security Advisers Files: Presidential Correspondence with Foreign Leaders, 1974-1977, and Memoranda of Conversations, 1973-1977.

The Presidential Correspondence with Foreign Leaders, 1974-1977 consists of a mix of routine and substantive letters and telegrams exchanged between President Ford and leaders of sixty-four countries. Substantive exchanges address such topics as Angola, the British financial crisis, economic summit meetings, Middle East peace process, OPEC, Cyprus, South Vietnam, NATO, and Soviet influence in Africa and Asia. Supporting materials, including memoranda, notes, and letter drafts, round out the collection. The collection consists primarily of letters, many of them originals, sent by foreign leaders to President Ford and copies of letters and messages sent by President Ford to foreign leaders. Many folders contain supporting materials used in drafting President Ford's letters and telegrams.

The Memoranda of Conversations, 1973-1977 consists of transcript-like records, and the notes from which they were prepared, of President Nixon's and President Ford's conversations with heads of state and foreign officials, senior intelligence and national security officials, American ambassadors, Cabinet members, members of Congress, and other distinguished foreign and American visitors. The memoranda of conversations (memcons) cover a wide variety of foreign affairs and national security topics, including the Middle East peace process, East-West relations, NATO and Europe, normalization of relations with the People's Republic of China, Angola, foreign aid, arms control, energy, foreign economic affairs, investigations of the intelligence community, and more.

German Baroque Literature: Yale Collection of German Baroque Literature

The von Faber du Faur collection of German Baroque literature was a major acquisition of the Yale Library in the early 1900s. Although the collection was not completely integrated with the library's own Baroque holdings until 1944, it continued to develop and expand until, in 1958, the combined collections totaled more than 1,900 items. At that time the von Faber du Faur bibliography of the collection was published, listing entries by period, subject and author. Within a decade enough new material had been added to the collection -- bringing the total items to more than 2,400 -- to warrant the creation of a supplementary bibliography.

Following the von Faber du Faur bibliography, each volume within the collection has been filmed page by page in the order established by Dr. von Faber du Faur, integrating the works listed in the two volumes into a single sequence.

The Holocaust and Records of Concentration Camp Trials

RG153: Records of the Office of the Judge Advocate General (Army), War Crimes Branch, Entry 149: Records of Concentration Camp Trials, National Archives, College Park, MD

These records provide a unique legal perspective on war crimes perpetrated in Nazi Concentration Camps. Rumors of horrors about concentration camps leaked out from Germany before the end of the war. Few people believed the stories at the time, but then came the ghastly facts of Nazi brutality, revealed by Allied liberating forces. Battle-hardened veterans, inured to the sight and smell of death, were sickened by what they saw. Staggering out to meet them were walking skeletons; their bodies stripped of flesh and their minds rippled by disease and starvation. General Dwight D. Eisenhower recorded that he had "never at any other time experienced an equal sense of shock." He urged Washington and London to send observers to see the indisputable evidence.

This collection provides unique, and never published, documents on the investigation and prosecution of war crimes committed by Nazi concentration camp commandants and camp personnel.

Documents include: correspondence; trial records and transcripts; investigatory material, such as interrogation reports and trial exhibits; clemency petitions and reviews; photographs of atrocities; newspaper clippings; and pamphlets. Documents on several concentration (and later extermination) camps and sub-camps are represented in this new collection, including Mauthausen, Dachau, Belsen-Bergen, Buchenwald, Treblinka, Sobibor, etc.

Mauthausen documents are well represented and include: 33 lists of Mauthausen victims arranged by nationality and compiled by the U.S. 3rd Army from death certificates, notifications of next of kin,

Testaments to the Holocaust

The publication of the unique and rare source material contained in the Wiener Library’s holdings offers students and researchers unprecedented new opportunities to study an extensive range of historical documents pertaining to the development of Nazi Germany and the Holocaust, many of which have never previously been published.

Series 2: Thematic Press Cuttings Collection, 1933-1945

From its earliest days, the Wiener Library gave a high priority to the systematic collection of press materials relating to the NSDAP and its policies, especially those affecting Jewish lives. A particular strength of the collection is the enormous range of newspapers and journals that were cut. All the major German, English, American and French titles were used.

Series 3: Henriques Archive

The Henriques Archive consists of the papers of Lady Rose Henriques who was head of the German Department of the Jewish Committee for Relief Abroad (JCRA). The objective of the JCRA was to organize the Jewish Relief Unit (JRU) as its operational body for service in post-war Europe. The JRU worked to help those who had been in concentration camps (known as Displaced Persons or DPs) and was most active in Bergen Belsen, which became the central Jewish Displaced Person's camp in the British Zone of Occupation. The Henriques Archive has not been previously filmed. There are approximately 48,000 documents, plus 6 photograph albums on Displaced Persons and JRU work in Germany, Austria, U.K., Greece and Italy.

Ireland

Belfast Telegraph

Recognized as the “national newspaper of Northern Ireland,” the Belfast Telegraph is perfectly placed to record the events in the province. Read by all shades of the political spectrum in Northern Ireland, the Belfast Telegraph is valued for its unbiased non-sectarian reporting of conflicts. The paper covers every aspect of Northern Irish public life, from news, current affairs and business to finance and cultural events. In particular, it provides crucial insights into the Anglo-Irish conflict, featuring on-the-spot reporting and in-depth analysis of the major events leading up to the peace process, the “Good Friday Agreement,” the Referendum and the Omagh bombing. The paper is an invaluable resource for charting the views and opinions of the people of Northern Ireland.

Economic and Social Investigations in Ireland Transactions of the Dublin Social Inquiry and Statistical Society, 1847-1919

The Dublin Social Inquiry and Statistical Society began life as the Dublin Statistical Society in 1847. Its purpose, in common with other statistical societies of the period, was the study of social problems and their alleviation.

Researchers involved in history, law, social science and intellectual history will find the proceedings of the Society a starting point for any research on Ireland relative to the Parliamentary papers of the period. At an international level, the Dublin Statistical Society attracted great interest. By addressing international issues, international approaches and experiences were brought to bear in Irish problems. Historians will find the proceedings an important historical document of the period not only in the collection and analysis of statistical information, but also in the prescription of law reforms to solve particular problems. The evidence from the proceedings forms an important part of the Irish contribution to 19th century thought.

Ireland: Politics and Society through the Press, 1760-1922

This collection is a major new project that creates a coherent body of newspapers and journals on microfilm and will enable researchers from many different disciplines to consult the Irish press between 1760 and 1922 in all its variety. Newspapers have been an essential strand in the growth of Irish society and the Irish economy.

This important collection draws together more than 45 newspapers chronicling a crucial period in Irish history from the accession of George III to the throne in 1760, to Irish independence in 1922. Sourced from several libraries, this collection is designed to show the rise of the modern Irish state and society in all their complexity, and will be valuable to anyone studying and writing on politics, the arts, literature, the economy, and leisure. It also serves the needs of family historians, an important and growing group of press users worldwide. The provincial newspapers are a key source of information on national as well as local press. They offer a distinctive and unrivalled insight into all areas of life in the provinces, often playing a significant role in local political and economic debate.

Manuscripts of the Irish Literary Renaissance

Dublin's Abbey Theatre was of central importance to the Irish cultural and dramatic renaissance. It provided a forum for the controversial new ideas of W. B. Yeats, Sean O'Casey and J. M. Synge. The last of the great 19th-century actors—Bernhardt, Irving, Coquelin and Duse—also performed in Dublin. Much activity surrounding the theatre survives only in ephemeral and obscure sources, yet this era is of crucial significance to all theatre historians. The collection brings to life the most vital and exciting years of modern Irish literature. A copy of The Synge Manuscripts in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin: A Catalogue Prepared on the Occasion of the Synge Centenary Exhibition, 1971 (Dublin, 1971) accompanies the collection.

FBI File on Ezra Pound

This intriguing FBI file deals with the World War II activities of poet Ezra Pound. Pound, who wrote such major works as the epic Cantos, Hugh Selwyn Mauberly, and Seafarer, was an American expatriate for much of his life. He was active in promulgating fascist ideology while living in Italy during World War II especially through radio broadcasts directed at the United States. Charged with treason by the United States government, he was captured after the war in Geneva and was brought to the United States for trial. He admitted to voluntarily broadcasting fascist propaganda for pay. Pound was eventually confined to a mental institution in 1958 after being deemed unfit for trial. Included in this lightly excised collection are radio transcripts, correspondence with Italian and German officials, and a memo from Adolph Hitler.

Italian Music Manuscripts, c.1640-c.1820

Richly diverse and extensive, this collection holds great interest for music scholars of the 17th-, 18th- and early 19th-century Italian music. The collection offers an abundance of sources for vocal and instrumental music, sacred and secular. Researchers will have the opportunity to trace the development of particular forms and styles of music, ranging from opera and oratorio to toccata. Organized in four chronological segments, Italian Music Manuscripts bears comparison with distinguished manuscript collections in Italy and is one of the world's most substantial collections of Italian music in the world. A printed guide is also available.

Missionary Files: Methodist Episcopal Church, Board Correspondence, 1884–1915

The correspondence in this micropublication was created under the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. This material represents the foreign missionary concerns of the Society and its successor, the Board of Foreign Missions. Primarily outgoing correspondence from the Mission Society staff, these files contain correspondence with missionaries as well as material relating to routine business issues. Topics include applicants (called re-enforcements), gifts, wills, estates, and annuities. Also included is information on sending missionaries and answers to regular reports and correspondence. This collection consists of letterpress books. Each book deals with a specific topic. The names of staff members appear on the volume if their letters are filed in the book. Each book usually begins with an index detailing to whom the letters were written.

Venetian Opera Libretti

This remarkable collection includes virtually every opera produced in Venice from 1637 (the opening of the first public opera house) until 1769. The libretti themselves were assembled in the 18th century, following Antonio Groppo's chronology. This collection contains 1,286 libretti, bound in 117 volumes. The libretti were published in Venice, the center of opera during the 17th and most of the 18th century. The collection serves as an important "guidebook" to the history of opera in Venice. From a study of the libretti, scholars will discover the change in plot and theme from mythology to politics.

The Venetian Opera Libretti collection supports research into the literary aspects of the libretto, the staging of operas, production methods, the social issues of the times and the lives and work of individual composers and librettists. The collection is accompanied by a hardcover catalog from the University of California Press. The catalog includes entries with full title-page transcriptions, summary of contents and lists of all personnel for each opera. In addition, the catalog includes five appendices and 17 indexes that provide optimum access to a broad range of information, including titles, theaters, roles, dedicatees and other significant aspects of production.

Colonial Latin American Manuscripts and Transcripts in the Obadiah Rich Collection

In the late 1700s, Carlos III, King of Spain, commissioned Juan Bautista Muñoz to "give a history of the Indies, complete in all its parts, authenticated with original documents." Eventually the body of work passed into the hands of Obadiah Rich, who supplemented it with other pertinent reports. There are more than 100 volumes in this collection, including reports of explorations; correspondence between the kings of Spain and the Spanish explorers relating to the administration of the colonies as well as disputes among explorers; descriptions by Spanish missionaries of the Indian natives and their resistance to Spanish settlers; histories of the Conquistadors: The Struggle for Colonial Power in Latin America, 1492-1825 represents the richest single available source of primary source material from the "Age of Discovery" outside Spain. This remarkable collection features expedition records, original letters and maps of exploration and colonization, and "diaries of discoveries" from South America, providing an essential documentary resource on this fascinating era. The emphasis of the collection however is very much on exploration, with maps, scrolls, descriptions of voyages by sea and river, terrain, flora and fauna, settlement posts, plantations and mines, missionary activities, and "diaries of discoveries." Territories represented include Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Cuba, Ecuador, Florida, Guatemala, Guiana, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Patagonia, Peru, Puerto Rico, Texas, Uruguay, Venezuela and the West Indies. Languages include Spanish, English, Portuguese, French and Italian.

Documenting the Portuguese Revolution, 1962-1994

The thirty-year span of the collection provides insight into all stages of the revolutionary process. Primary sources illuminate the revolution's germination in the fraternization between African independence fighters and Portuguese troops in Angola, Guinea-Bissau, and Mozambique. Other materials chronicle its deepening as peasants seized the land, workers occupied the shops, and women organized the Liberation Movement. The implementation of a radical economic program of nationalizing industry and collectivizing agriculture is covered in depth. Finally, there is ample documentation of the maturation of the revolution into a moderate civilian-ruled democracy more attuned to European trends in economic reform.

El País

El País has a unique cultural significance. It first appeared in 1976, shortly after the death of General Franco, with a mission to defend Spain's emerging democracy and urge on the modernization of Spanish society. Since then it has established itself at home and abroad as Spain's foremost independent newspaper with the largest daily circulation in the country. The paper not only focuses on Europe, but also offers strong coverage of the entire Hispanic world. It is a rich source for researchers seeking to understand economic change and political culture. From the attempted coup d'état in 1981 to regional conflicts and ETA terrorism, El País offers diverse and incisive accounts of Spain's recent dramatic history. The Edición Madrid is filmed for this microform edition making it a unique reference tool for everyone interested in Spain and its contemporary role in international affairs.

European Music Manuscripts

Series Three: From the Biblioteca do Paco Ducal de Vila Vicosa, Portugal

Housed in the magnificent Ducal Palace of the House of Braganza, the music library of the Fundação Braganca is a remarkable collection of little-known manuscript sources. At least fifty manuscripts represent missing acts or manuscripts directly connected with the music at the Ajuda library, as the Portuguese. The collection also includes manuscripts which originated in the public theatres of Lisbon, particularly the Teatro do Solitre, and some remarkable indigenous genres such as three marionette operas and "villancios," polyphonic works performed in Church at Christmas before the emergence of opera. One fascinating aspect of the Vila Viçosa collection is that it was not affected by the great Lisbon earthquake of 1751, so much material, predominantly sacred, survives from before this date, where all comparable Lisbon collections were destroyed.

George H.W. Bush and Foreign Affairs

Part 2: Bosnia and the Situation in the Former Yugoslavia

This collection consists of materials related to the former Yugoslavia, particularly Bosnia, and presidential decision-making. This collection provides researchers with the opportunity to develop a comprehensive picture of the many issues and the impacts of U.S. policy on the newly-created republics. Issues addressed include diplomatic recognition, humanitarian relief, military intervention, and international negotiations. Documentation consists of cables, NSC materials, press releases, press summaries, news items, and letters from Congress. The press releases originated with such organizations as the White House Press Office, the UN, and AmeriCares (a charitable organization). Many of the press summaries were faxed to the White House by the Republic of Serbia's Ministry of Information. Letters from members of Congress generally urge action of one kind or another in the Balkans and often include supporting material such as newspaper articles or

The Spanish Plays Collection

Acquired from the Hispanic Society of America in 1938, this collection consists of more than 8000 titles published in Spain between 1830 and 1920. It is a broad representation, primarily in Spanish, of dramatic works containing examples of the varied literary movements experienced in Spain from Romanticism to Social Realism. Among the noteworthy authors strongly represented in this collection are the 1904 Nobel Prize recipient Jose Echegaray; the prolific writer of sainetes, of which more than 200 were set to music as zarzuelas, Carlos Arniches y Bamera; Joaquin Dicenta Benedicto; Antonio Garcia Gutierrez; Antonio Gil y Zarate, Manuel Breton de los Hemeros; and the distinguished genero duwo writer, Richardo de la Vega.

Verhandlungen. Stenographische Berichte.

Roughly equivalent to the Congressional Record and the Serial Set in one, this title began in March 1871 and ran through 1933. It is the collected edition of proceedings issued daily during each legislative session of the body which succeeded the Reichstag of the North German Confederation. Each session's debates ("Stenographische Berichte," including question and answer periods and plenary decisions) are accompanied by supplementary volumes with the title "Anlagen." These include legislative bills, reports of committees and party groups, formal inquiries and responses, etc. Most of the Anlagen are numbered with the main volumes (1887-1889/90 also carry separate numbers; 1890/91-1905/06 are numbered separately only). Volumes for 1907-1933 are called volumes 227-458, in a continuous numbering scheme originating with proceedings of parliamentary bodies antedating the German Reichstag, and including both the debates and volumes supplementary to the debates. Volumes 326-458 (1919-1933) relate essentially to the Weimar Republic, and include proceedings of the National Constituent Assembly (volumes 326-343, 1919-1920) which wrote the Weimar constitution.
